The new U. S. weather building is completed and Local Forecaster W. A. Shaw has moved his family there. The building is modern in every respect, equipped with all devices for an accurate test of weather conditions. The exterior of the building is red brick, trimmed with Indiana limestone. It is 35 years since the bureau at Northfield was started and for many years it was located in Jackson hall, one of the dormitories, and was transferred to Dewey hall when that building was completed. It was due largely to the influence of Col. Kittredge Haskins that the appropriation for the new building was made.

The Milled Slate Business.

The improvement in the mill slate business has been most pronounced this season. The demand has been growing for the past two years and there has been a decided betterment in the price of the product. When the panic of 1907 swooped down upon this town many of those in the slate business did what those in other lines, notably iron and steel, did, they sought to stimulate trade by cutting the prices on the entire output. Competition then got busy and the result came mighty near being disastrous. With wisdom born of experience some of the largest and best concerns turned the keys in their offices and mills and either went abroad or took long vacations until there was improvement in general conditions, which they were sure would bring about something very much better in the slate business. These concerns are now getting back into the business as they can see or think they can see no more a living home a handsome profit in it if rightly conducted.

The raw product, at the quarries, is to-day bringing the highest price ever known for milled slate and this with the wage scale, now at the highest notch, has brought about changes in prices that are simply natural to a season of prosperity, in which the Vermont business man is a sharer with the rest. There is really no competitor with Vermont slate and there is a certain demand for it the year around. There is plenty of it for all the purposes for which it is used, in and about the hills that surround Fair Haven and the general condition through the country either lessens or increases the call for it. Plenty of building is its great stimulus and there is lots of that in good time like the present. As the milled slate business in this vicinity's main industry all the people are glad to see the slate mills busy and the only thing that would cause them more pleasure would be to see them forced by push of orders to work overtime. Fair Haven Era.
